images, please visit program. Photo courtesy of Charles Tillery. That was the beginning of the end for the iconic Navy Lighter-Than-Air powered submarines made it impossible for the blimps to detect and track at Glynco. This procedure was used until the introduction of the faster nuclear-on. New technologies were continually developed for this purpose and tested “crash dive,” or rapid submersion, seen here. After that event, the chase was during World War II. The blimps, or airships, escorted merchant marine ships now home to Brunswick Golden Isles Airport and the Federal Law...